Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: . . . leader in the campaign against extravagance moved a reduction of the appropriation that would cut off the man who amused himself by supervising the schools. The motion was carried with a rush. The second town meeting, succeeding the first by a few days, was extremely interesting. I shall not attempt to describe it--the memory of it always gives me a thrill. It was a battle royal for the little ones. I thought of the old days of Otis and Patrick Henry. At this meeting a motion was made to reconsider, backed by eloquence rarely heard in these days. Only the leader voted against the motion, and the original appropriation was carried without a dissenting voice. The battle for the common schools is the battle for human liberty, and Quincy was fortunate in the defenders of that which lies at the basis of our Republic. Permit me to interpolate a personal statement. I have been accused of fighting battles. It is not true; I have never fought a battle, unless trying to teach school is fighting. The School Committee did all the work of defense, and each member was a host in himself. The Superintendent was granted the entire supervision of the town schools. The choice of teachers and their dismissal, the making of the course of study, the examination, indeed everything that pertains to pedagogy, he relegated to his principals, and they in turn to their teachers. The tyranny of the Superintendent consisted in demanding that...
