Not illustrated. 1915 Excerpt: .about 3,000 pumping plants have been installed in the eight southern counties since 1910. Localities where development of this kind is most conspicuous are San Jacinto Valley, West Riverside, Chino, Ventura County and several valleys in San Diego County. Lands in the mountain or elevated orchard districts, such as Victor, Antelope, Yucaipa, and other valleys situated at elevations of 2,500 to 4,000 feet above sea level, are being rapidly settled or taken up under the Desert Act. Settlers in Victor Valley are making concerted effort to secure government aid for the reclamation of their lands and to consummate a plan for turning the water stored by Arrowhead Reservoir to their lands on the Mojave Desert. The largest addition to the irrigated area of southern California during the past two years is in Palo Verde and Imperial valleys, where water for irrigation is taken by...
